

Quick Facts:

- Regulatory economist at the Office of Economic Research within the U.S. Small Business Administration (SBA) Office of Advocacy
- MPP (2015) from the GW Trachtenberg School of Public Policy and Public Administration with a concentration in regulatory policy
- GW Regulatory Studies Research Assistant ('14-'15), RSC Fellow in the Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs (OIRA) (Summer 2014)

Lindsay chose the Trachtenberg School for her MPP in part because it is one of the few schools that offers a concentration in regulatory policy, and during her two years at GW she took full advantage of the opportunities available through the GW Regulatory Studies Center. In the summer of 2014, after excelling in the Regulatory Comment Clinic, she was awarded a Regulatory Studies Center fellowship to work as an OIRA policy analyst. The Center then selected her to be a Research Assistant for the following academic year, where she was an integral and valued member of the team, researching, writing, and submitting several regulatory comments. The knowledge she gained, combined with her outstanding analytic and writing skills, led to her position as regulatory economist with SBA Advocacy upon graduation.

In her role with SBA Advocacy, Lindsay spends about a third of her time on regulatory research and the remainder on performing economic analyses of regulatory proposals to evaluate their economic and regulatory implications for the small business community. Her portfolio includes agencies such as the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB), the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC), the Food and Drug Administration (FDA), and the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA).

Lindsay is thriving in her intellectually challenging role with SBA Advocacy in part due to her experiences in the Trachtenberg School, the GW Regulatory Studies Center, and her OIRA fellowship.
