

1. The GW Regulatory Studies Center is a chartered academic center in the Columbian College of Arts and Sciences, Trachtenberg School of Public Policy and Public Administration led by director Susan Dudley and co-directors Joseph Cordes and Christopher Carrigan. Its mission is to improve regulatory policy through research, education, and outreach. In furtherance of this mission, its scholars rely on both quantitative and qualitative social science research methods that are at the heart of a wide range of disciplines; they apply the widely accepted economics, legal, and policy analysis principles and tools that every president since Jimmy Carter has required to ensure regulations serve the public welfare.
2. Center scholars' expertise and achievements in the fields of public policy and administration, economics, administrative law, regulatory impact analysis, and political science are recognized by leading organizations in their fields, including the Administrative Conference of the United States, the National Academy of Public Administration, the Society for Benefit-Cost Analysis, the American Bar Association, the American and Midwest Political Science Associations, the Southern Economic Association, the American Society for Public Administration, the National Academy of Sciences' Transportation Research Board, and more. Their research covers a diverse range of topics in regulatory policy and practice.
3. Center scholars publish their research in respected peer-reviewed academic and legal journals, including the Journal of Policy Analysis and Management, Public Administration Review, Risk Analysis, Journal of Benefit-Cost Analysis, Regulation and Governance, American Political Science Review, Journal of Politics, Journal of Regulatory Economics, Journal of Empirical Legal Studies, Review of Industrial Organization, the Federal Communications Law Journal, Administrative Law Review, and more.
4. The Center supports graduate Trachtenberg School students through research opportunities, stipends that allow them to take unpaid internships in government agencies, and career guidance.
5. The Center organizes well-attended events that feature insights on regulatory policy and practice from individuals across disciplines and the ideological spectrum, including members of Congress, high-ranking officials from each of the last six administrations, international diplomats and academics, and legal, policy, political science, and economic scholars.
6. The Center receives support for its activities from governments, foundations, companies, and individuals. It does not accept funding that is conditioned on hiring (or retaining) particular individuals, nor that influences the content or conclusions of its work. While Center researchers occasionally submit comments on specific regulations, their analysis is based on a public interest perspective. The Center explicitly does not accept direct funding for individual comments.
